Poultry Hints.

In the care of poultry there are two essential points to be considered-first cleanliness, to insure complete immunity from lice, which can only be secured by the frequent use of limewater, sulphur and carbolic acid, or kerosine, upon the roosts, together with frequent clean ing of the floor, and occasionally the use of fresh earth or sand; and secondly, the importance of plenty of fresh grass, or green vegetable matter for food. If these are adopted as of prime necessity, there diseases will be scarcely ever known. From careful watching, the giving of (in grass runs) young grass, cut and put into the pens has been found indisputably necessary to the well-being of fowls and especially new and thinly seeded ones. young chicks, particularly when become overgrown late in the summer kept in confinement in small yards, with weeds that have found a lodgepens, to prevent them from destroying the gardens, or from necessity, in the cities where yard When these occur, a mower, better a room is scarce. Again, pastures are seeded down with red clover and timothy and after they are well set, nature is left to take its course. In three or four years the red clover has died out and white clover and blue grass taken its place. A pasture should be well seeded with clover every other year, and sown without being hulled if possible. The hull holds the moisture and helps to germinate.
